Glassopolis, a leading fabricator and distributor of specialty glass products in the U.S. and Canada, is pleased to announce the recent hiring of Fred Fulton as Key Accounts Manager, responsible for overseeing the company's growing roster of commercial glass contractor clients.

Fred brings considerable knowledge and experience to the role, with more than 25 years in the industry. He was most recently VP Marketing with Fulton Windows – a manufacturer of window and curtain-wall systems shipped worldwide – that was recently acquired by Oldcastle.

"I'm joining Glassopolis at an exciting time," Fulton said. "With an ever increasing number of niche manufacturers producing great new specialty glass products, most glass contractors want to deal with a single knowledgeable specialty glass supplier that understands their unusual projects."

"Glass contractors have been terribly under-served when it comes to specialty glass products," said Jordan Richards, President of Glassopolis. "Fred knows the industry inside and out and has worked on many major glazing projects across the US. His insights and experience are going to give Glassopolis customers confidence that they've got a "go-to" guy – someone who truly understands their business and their needs."

Glassopolis is a division of ProScience, an established distribution company with a wealth of expertise in fire-rated, lead x-ray and other specialty glass, selling over 10 million square feet of fire-rated and ceramic glass over the years.
