

Southern Stretch Forming Turns 5 in California

Southern Stretch Forming is celebrating its fifth year in Modesto, California. The metal curver opened its plant in May of 2003 with the very first invoice going to San Joaquin Glass in Fresno. Since then, as Marketing Director, Charles Michie (“Mickey”) states, “We have been fortunate to have metal on many high profile buildings such as the San Jose Civic Center, the Orange County Performing Arts Center, the Saint Stanislaus Catholic Church and many others. These jobs have given us exposure and credibility.”

Southern Stretch Forming has had its headquarters in Denton, TX just north of Dallas since 1991. The Modesto plant was its first outside branch and has since added divisions in Colorado and Pennsylvania. David Arthur, President, expressed his gratitude when saying, “This five-year milestone would not have been possible had it not been for those companies who at the outset risked sending their material to us to curve. We were new to them at the time. We truly appreciate this and their continued support.”
